DCH Health System is sponsoring its annual Baby Palooza celebration tomorrow in Tuscaloosa.

It's a maternity expo open to men and women of all ages. Janice Neill is the Assistant Administrator for the DCH Health System. She says the focus is to create a fun environment for families to see the resources that are available to support them in their new adventure of child care.

“There's always something new being introduced into the market in a way of a product that can make your life easier, education about what you can expect in your childbirth experience; I encourage everyone to come.”

The expo will be held from ten until two-thirty PM at the Bryant Conference. Registration is free and can be done online or at the door. Visit babypalooza-dot-com for more information.

DCH Health System is sponsoring its annual Baby Palooza Expo tomorrow in Tuscaloosa.

It's a statewide initiative for families to interact and see what new products and services are available in caring for an infant. Janice Neill is the Assistant Administrator for the DCH Health System. She says DCH's mission is to provide the best community service for the families of West Alabama.

“The theme is set very much like a baby shower – like a big baby shower – so there are giveaways throughout the time, games, activities; come make yourself at home, visit and spend as much time as you'd like with each vendor.”

Neill says around 600 people attended the expo last year. This year's event will be held from ten until two-thirty PM at the Bryant Conference Center. Registration is free and can be done at the door or online at babypalooza-dot-com.
